I searched the Internet and found the book
The Machine, written by Georges Perec, a manuscript from a radio play, a fantasy about the future - computers as creators and interpreters of poetry. With Georges's text and my computer I created the program Georges once dreamed of. The book you are holding is no. 2 of 400 unique copies created by the program.

OE

The Machine

This radio play seeks to simulate the functioning of a computer programmed to analyze and decompose Johann Wolfgang von Goethe's Ramblers Lullaby II. The machine and its system consist of:

1. a number of programs that enable it to approach the poem from different directions, to grasp it in all its diverse aspects, and to execute various linguistic operations that present the poem in a new light;
2. a group of processors that contain:
 - a) the poem,
 - b) a bank of instantaneously retrievable data about the poem's author,
 - c) a comprehensive vocabulary of major world languages,
 - d) several alphabets that are put together according to a phonological key which enables them to form words,
 - e) a syntactical key, i.e., a grammar, and
 - f) a wide selection of poetry from world literature.

Rambler's Lullaby II -Johann Wolfgang von Goethe

Over all hilltops
is rest,
in all treetops
you feel
hardly a breath;
the birds are silent in the forest.
Only wait, soon
you too shall rest.
